The Book of Purification

The scholars of this nation have agreed that seeking knowledge is an obligation upon every Muslim, and that the foundation of all knowledge is the knowledge of Allah, His names and His attributes. Purification is the key to the prayer and half of faith.

Water and its Types

Whoever reflects upon the condition of the early generations will find that they were the most eager of people in following the Sunnah and the furthest of people from innovations in the religion. Water is of two types: pure water that purifies, and impure water.

It is therefore necessary for the student to begin with the most important matters, then those which follow them in importance, without neglecting the etiquette of learning and acting upon what he learns.

The Description of Ablution

This is the methodology that the righteous predecessors followed, and it is the methodology of the people of the Sunnah in every era, as the author explains in detail in the following pages of this treatise. The ablution begins with the intention, then saying the name of Allah, then washing the hands three times.

The Book of Prayer

It is therefore necessary for the student to begin with the most important matters, then those which follow them in importance, without neglecting the etiquette of learning and acting upon what he learns. The prayer is obligatory five times in the day and night.

The Times of Prayer

This is the methodology that the righteous predecessors followed, and it is the methodology of the people of the Sunnah in every era, as the author explains in detail in the following pages of this treatise.
